THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBERTA STAFF BULLETIN

EDMONTON, ALBERTA

14 SEPTEMBER 1978

FORTY YEARS LATER

Forty years ago on 31 August, "at about three-thirty in the afternoon," Walter H. Johns arrived in Edmonton, where he had been hired as a Lecturer in Classics at the University of Alberta.

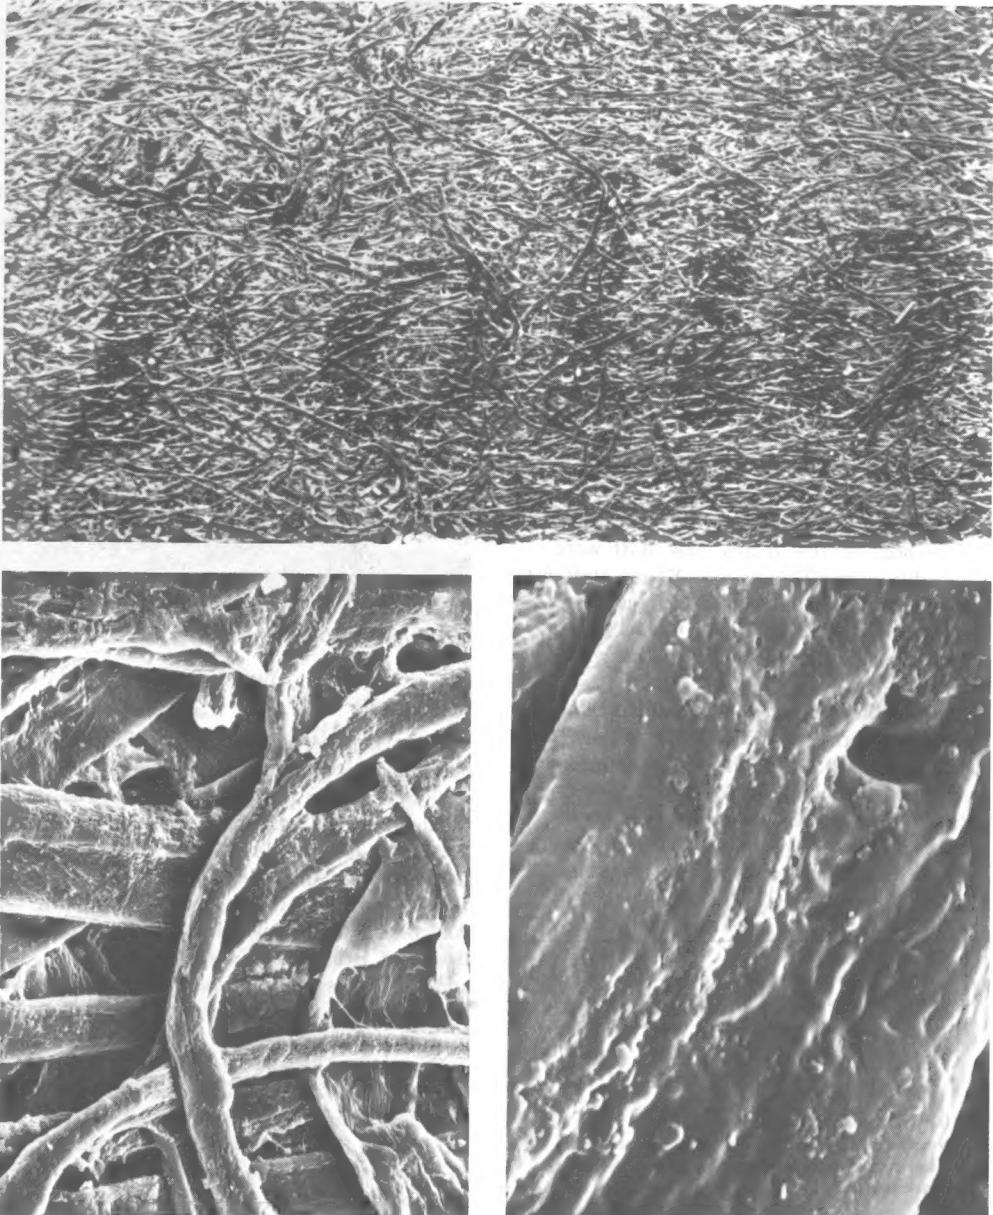

He and his wife Helen had driven from western Ontario, via the United States. "We had been told in Ontario that if you bought a car there and drove it out West, you could sell it for more than you paid for it. So we piled everything onto the back seat and drove out. And, sure enough, we sold that car for $50 more than we paid." In 1938, $50 was a substantial sum indeed. "We couldn't afford to run a car in those days. We took the streetcar or walked."

When the couple reached the city they saw a clutch of prominent red brick buildings. "That," I announced, "will be the University." It wasn't. It was Knox United Church, Metropolitan Church (later lost to fire), the public library, and the Baptist Church.

They set about at once looking for a home to rent. "We must have looked at a dozen places before six o'clock that day. . . . I remember one ad for a 'radiant flat', and I thought, 'What a unique and lovely description—I have to see this.' But when we got there we found that 'radiant' meant it had a gas fireplace." He and Mrs. Johns finally settled on a handsome brick house in Strathcona, where they lived for a year until they moved into accommodations on campus and their house was taken over by a "brilliant young surgeon, Walter Mackenzie." That brilliant young surgeon later became Dean of Medicine, through much the same time that Dr. Johns was President of the University.

"I was hired to start work at the University at 9 a.m. on the first of September, and I was there." He was shown his office at the northeast corner of the second floor of the Arts Building, an office he was expected to share with W.G. Hardy, who was Head of the Classics Department, and Geneva Meisner, who was the professor of Greek. Next door were Professors Long and Collins of the History Department, and Professors Campbell, Cook, Keeping, and Sheldon of the Mathematics Department were around the corner.

The matter of furnishings was left up to the janitor, who thought he had an old desk in the basement that might do. Dr. Johns discovered later that the desk had belonged to Henry Marshall Tory, the University's first President.

Take a closer look. The above photographs of Folio print and paper are taken by the Scanning Electron Microscope in the Department of Entomology, and they allow you the illusion of incredibly powerful eyesight. The top picture shows what you would see looking at Folio at a relatively low SEM magnification. The picture in the bottom left corner is of a clear piece of the paper we print Folio upon, at a higher magnification. In the bottom right corner is a close up of a wood fiber in the paper. According to George Braybrook, the photographer, the SEM can be used in areas ranging from medicine to metallurgy. In the past ten years the use of the technology has proliferated, and its impact upon how we view the world has yet to be fully gauged.

Dr. Johns, a graduate of the University of Western Ontario and of Cornell University, had had a broad and sound education, which was put to good use here and elsewhere in his early career, teaching Latin, Comparative Literature, Ancient History, Medieval and Renaissance History, Modern History, even Canadian History. (As a Lecturer in the East before he came to Alberta, he had been assigned a course in Canadian history to teach. "When I complained that I hadn't even taken a course in Canadian history, I was told, 'You have to be better than the last one who taught it. She didn't know any Canadian history, didn't want to know, didn't like it, and wasn't even Canadian. At least you are Canadian.' " Dr. Johns maintained his love of Canadian history ever since.) He taught fifteen hours a week his first year here (it was better than the twenty-four he had taught the year before in Ontario), prepared and read radio broadcasts for CKUA, and gave extension lectures in rural Alberta.

What was more, he was one of a very small number of young faculty, who were especially scarce because few if any new staff were hired during the Depression. Young staff were prevailed upon to help with campus sports, and, among other things, Dr. Johns found himself pushing stop-watch buttons with the best.

During the war years, his extracurricular activities extended to COTC (Canadian Officer Training Corps). After the war, in 1945, he was asked to help John Macdonald, the Dean of Arts and Sciences, with the great influx of returned veterans, many of whom he had taught before they went overseas.

From helping the Dean, Dr. Johns drifted more and more into an administrative career in the University, as he moved from Assistant to the Dean to Academic Assistant to the President, Robert Newton, in 1947, to Dean of Arts and Sciences in 1952, to Vice-President in 1957. In 1958, President Andrew Stewart resigned to head the new Board of Broadcast Governors in Ottawa, and Dr. Johns found himself at once President, Vice-President, and part-time Classics professor for a year.

He wrote a decade later, "I had really no desire to be Vice-President and even less to be President, since I had seen enough of the burdens of the office when I was assistant to Dr. Newton and to Dr. Stewart, but in view of the urgency of finding someone to carry on following Dr. Stewart's resignation, I agreed to serve at least for a year or two until a permanent appointment could be made."

Dr. Johns carried on until 1969 as President during the University's most turbulent years since its beginning.

Two weeks ago, on the fortieth anniversary of his arrival in Edmonton, Dr. Johns was clearing out his office in the Humanities Centre, "to free the space for someone more actively involved in University affairs." He was sorting out books to take home and reread, to give to the library, or to pass on to various teaching departments, and culling through his files, which he is sending to the University Archives. As he read through his files, he was happily remembering friends he had met through the years and the students he had taught or advised or worked with as President. Among the less expected artifacts in his office were a centuries-old jade brush rack of Korean or Chinese origin, a gift from one of the many people whom he had come to know in the course of his long career, and a fine red cotton banner with a silk-screened portrait of Che Guevara, a memento from a young revolutionary of the 1960s, "so you won't forget us, as if you ever could."

Since his retirement, Dr. Johns has not lessened his activity in the University and the community. He has headed a provincial commission on nursing education and has taken an active part in helping the University's fund-raising activities, among many other things. Perhaps most important, he has been busy researching and writing a history of the University, which is now almost finished.

Looking back over forty years at the University, Dr. Johns seems to relish most of all the students he has known and the many friends he has met, all around the world. Although he loved teaching, he said, somehow he wound up spending most of his career as an administrator: "But, you know, there is one good thing about being President of a University—you meet an awful lot of wonderful people."

JUANITA CHAMBERS APPOINTED EMERITUS PROFESSOR OF THE FACULTE SAINT-JEAN

Juanita Chambers has been appointed Emeritus Professor of the Faculté Saint-Jean, and she has accepted the responsibility of developing a professional teacher training program for the future bilingual school teachers of Western Canada.

Dr. Chambers will study different models of teacher training, especially those of communities where more than one language is used. She will be in communication with the various francophone associations, the Franco-Albertan population in general, and with all those who have an interest in bilingual education in the province. She hopes for a good deal of participation from the public.

Dr. Chambers's most recent position was that of Professor in the Department of Educational Psychology. Throughout her career she has been closely involved with special education, having served as head psychologist at the Mental Hygiene Institute in Montreal from 1954 to 1958, and at the Montreal Children's Hospital from 1958 to 1960. From 1960 to 1967 she served as the Director of Psychological and Educational Services of Hartere Schools of Montreal, after which she began her stay in Edmonton.

Dr. Chambers's responsibilities will lead her throughout the province and the country. She will work, however, from her office at Faculté Saint-Jean, and she can be contacted there.

UNIVERSITY PRESS PUBLISHES ITS FIRST TRADE BOOK

Until this summer, the titles published by the University of Alberta Press were strictly scholarly. With Pottery in Alberta, written by Marylu Antonelli and Jack Forbes and released this month, the Press has produced its first book for the general reader.

Ms. Antonelli is a free-lance writer and editor, and Professor Forbes is head of the ceramics division of the Faculty of Extension. The volume is fully and handsomely illustrated in black and white and in color, showing both the products produced and scenes and individuals from the history of the industry.

Pottery in Alberta, as the authors state in their preface, was "written to grasp something that almost slipped away unnoticed": the ceramics industry that for more than half a century flourished in the south of the province.

The industry grew up in the Medicine Hat region in the first decade of this century, fostered by superior clay deposits, an abundance of cheap natural gas, and the capital and enterprise of American, British, and local individuals, with or without any experience in pottery.

The book traces the development, waxing, and waning of a unique industry on the prairies, depending on the remembrances of the oldtimers who worked in the industry as much as on the rather sketchy remaining collections of correspondence.

The potteries around Medicine Hat produced such disparate items as bricks and "real flower pots," sewer pipes and vases and hot water bottles. Alberta Clay Products produced mainly bricks, firebricks, sewer pipes, and similar construction materials. Medalta was the main producer of "stoneware", and indeed its various products are much sought today as antiques. Through the early years, there was a ready market for its gallon jugs, produced for such buyers as the Saskatchewan Liquor Control Board, who wrote complaining that Medalta jugs had a marked tendency to leak.

Medalta, at a time of vigor in the late 1920s, claimed a three thousand year guarantee for its goods: "If they wear out before that time, even at the end of the twenty-ninth hundred year, you may bring back the bowl, teapot, pitcher, vinegar jar, hot water 'pig', ginger beer bottle, or what not, and get a new one, or money cheerfully refunded."

During the Depression the Medicine Hat potteries had no shortage of workers, though they had a shortage of funds to pay them and at times paid them stock instead of dollars. At the time of World War II, the situation was reversed, although the prisoners of war from the Medicine Hat internment camp filled the need well and with surprising devotion to their work.

Following the war, the industries suffered a series of declines, largely due to the problems of competing with less expensive imports, a problem that had recurred frequently since their establishment at the beginning of the century. A new firm, Hycroft Potteries, added "sanitary wares" to its products—ceramic toilet bowls, including one special line called "the Albertan": ". . . not finished as fine, but when it comes to flushing. . . ."

Now the potteries have faded away, and another type of pottery industry has taken its place, production pottery and ceramic crafts, as Alberta has become a centre for some of the best creative potters in the country.

Pottery in Alberta ends with a hint of future directions for the ceramics industry in the province, a suggestion that out of the creative pottery enterprises a new industry may develop. As one artist-become-production potter is quoted, "If I am going to put a lot of creative energy into designing one coffee mug or teapot, or ten, or twenty, why not 200,000?"

Pottery in Alberta was published with the support of the Faculty of Extension and by means of a grant from Alberta Culture. It is available from the University Bookstore and from The University of Alberta Press, 450 Athabasca Hall, for $12.50.

PUBLICATIONS

A new column will be appearing on a regular basis in future issues of Folio. In this column, "Publications", it is our hope to place full bibliographic references to all work published by members of the University community during the current year (academic staff, non-academic staff, and students). The rationale for the new column is twofold: we hope to increase public understanding of the research function of this institution and of the significance of the advanced work that is undertaken here in a multiplicity of disciplines, and we wish to facilitate the compilation of an annual index of publications by our colleagues.

The criterion for the inclusion of work in the "Publications" column is simple: the work must have appeared in print during the past or current academic year, in books, monographs, learned or professional journals, or in proceedings of conferences. The titles of papers delivered at conferences and seminars will not be included in this column unless they have subsequently appeared in acta and proceedings. Similarly, work "in press" will not be accepted for inclusion in the column until it has finally appeared in print.

The success of this column depends on you, the reader. Please send your submissions (following as closely as possible the mode of citation employed in this column without any abbreviation) to:

FREE LECTURE SERIES

Food and food for thought will be combined during a fall lecture series undertaken by the University of Alberta's Faculty of Extension and Department of Sociology and Alberta College. The series is entitled "Oh! Canada—Current Dilemmas" and is open to the public at no cost on consecutive Wednesdays from 13 September to 15 November. Each lecture will begin at 12 noon at Alberta College, 10041 101 Street, Edmonton.

Professor Aleksander Matejko of the Department of Sociology and Professor Hayden Roberts of the Faculty of Extension established the lecture topics and approached various faculty members on their interest and availability regarding off-campus lecturing. According to Professor Matejko, the response was very good and he and Professor Roberts, not to mention the sponsoring bodies, now await audience response.

The format of the series is such that interested persons can bring their lunch, listen to the lecture and then pose questions. Such lecture series are widely practiced in Europe, and Professor Matejko notes that Jagiellonian University in Cracow, Poland, established a public lecture series in 1364.

The schedule for "Oh! Canada—Current Dilemmas" follows:

20 Sept. "Canadian society from a comparative perspective," A. Matejko, Department of Sociology.

27 Sept. "Energy resources in Canadian Society," J. Russell, Department of Surgery.

4 Oct. "Canada as a conserver society," G. Fearn, Department of Sociology.
